CPYRIGHT NEW DILEMMA

Russia's new educational program may eventually wreck the soviet system, in the opinion of Allen Dulles, America's top intelligence officer. Russia is being forced into an extensive mass-education program in order to catch up with the rest of the world in scientific and technical developments.

Dulles's theory is that the education program will result in a penetration of the fog of ignorance in which the top communist leaders attempt to keep the Russian people, and so reveal to the people the faults of their own country's system. It will be very difficult for the soviet leaders, Dulles believes, to close off their own people from access to the realities of the outside world.

The red regime has been forced to admit that science cannot be kept under wraps. They may have to acknowledge that economics can't be, either.

In order to develop scientists and technicians from among its people, Russia will have to provide a broad program of general education. For Russia to progress in the modern world, it must produce experts in many fields of activity. Mass education is necessary to seek out the potential experts.

Educated minds are bound to detect flaws and ask questions.
